Narrative Description

The Chautauqua Park and Ridgewood Additions in Ames, Iowa (Story County) were chosen for an Intensive Level Survey based on the high integrity of the existing historic resources and previous documentation that indicated significant architecture. William C. Page, Public Historian, conducted a reconnaissance survey of Ames, Iowa, and identified multiple properties in the study area that would benefit from further research and preservation (Historical and Architectural Resources of Ames, Iowa: Reconnaissance Survey, 1992). Multiple buildings were also included in the 1976 Central Iowa Regional Association of Local Governments Survey to identify significant architecture.

The purpose of the survey was to determine eligibility for a National Register of Historic Places District Nomination. The project results indicate that the Chautauqua Park and Ridgewood Additions retain their historic contextual significance and integrity and are therefore suitable for inclusion on the National Register of Historic Places.

The Chautauqua Park and Ridgewood Additions are a microcosm study of early Ames residential development, creating an interwoven understanding of the thematic values and changes in civic buildout throughout the first half of the 20th century. The cultural and architectural themes create a progressive story that facilitates a single, comprehensive District designation and therefore the survey area is described collectively rather than as independent platted areas. The period of significance was determined based upon the development of the area, including dates of construction and predominate architectural styling. The period of significance begins in 1910 at the time of platting and early development of the Chautauqua Park Addition and concludes post WWII in 1946.

The Chautauqua Park and Ridgewood Additions are early automobile suburbs of Ames, Iowa, platted in 1910 and 1916 respectively. Ames developed like many midwestern towns: at the crossroads of waterways and railways. Ioway Creek, which runs diagonally through present-day Ames, is the western border of both Additions, and the Union Pacific Railroad (previously the Chicago and Northwestern Railroad) is the eastern border. Ames' growth since its founding has been in relationship with transportation, from railroad to cars, and this had direct effect on the design and location of the Chautauqua Park and Ridgewood Additions. The growth of the Ames has also been intrinsically tied to the success of Iowa State University (previously Iowa Agricultural College and Iowa State College) located approximately two miles west of the original downtown. Early residents of the Additions were attracted by their proximity to the College, many of whom were documented as professors and administrators at the College.

The Chautauqua Park and Ridgewood Additions tie together these two major themes in Ames' development: transportation and education. As early automobile suburbs, the Additions were created to have easy access to the College. They were also developed on land that was previously used for an annual education-entertainment festival (the Chautauqua) in the first decade of the 20th century. Due to the uneven terrain of the area, automobiles made this space more accessible for development. There was a steadily increasing population of affluent administration and faculty purchasing real estate who could afford the needed automobiles.

Ames' transportation growth around trains continued parallel to the automobile until the 1920s, when auto-culture slowly began to overtake the influence of rail transportation. This transition was not always smooth, with difficulties like late street paving and poor original paving techniques. The connections to Iowa State College were also fraught, including lack of appropriate streets to move increasing levels of traffic, and the effects of floods and other natural phenomena on early bridges over loway Creek. The populations of the Chautauqua Park and Ridgewood Additions then had to contend with the effects of the Great Depression on the housing market, including tax sales and drastically changed architecture and cultural values related to living space.

The existing historic resources reflect these critical cultural changes in the built space and physically document the related aesthetic trends. Of the 150 residences surveyed, 123 residences are contributing buildings to the District. Additionally, there are 53 outbuildings that are contributing. In total, the District includes 176 contributing buildings.

The dates of construction indicate that 27 properties were built in the 1910s, 73 in the 1920s, 34 in the 1930s, and 10 from 1940-1946. Only six properties were constructed outside the period of significance, which is 1910-1946.

The Chautauqua Park and Ridgewood Additions are dominated by Craftsman styling with 74 documented examples. Colonial Revival styles include 26 residential examples. Minimal Traditional styling (which also includes Cape Cod and "No Style") are represented in 28 residential examples, and 17 residences are in the Tudor Revival style. Five buildings reflect Ranch styling but all of these are non-contributing to the District.

In addition to documenting human-made structures, this survey considered other historic resources that directly impact the integrity of the Chautauqua Park and Ridgewood Additions and collected preliminary data on historic trees. With the ties to Olmsted-style urban planning and a clear value for landscape features made evident in the platting, understanding trees as historic resources will help maintain the original intention of the Additions. Overall, 22 trees were noted as historic. Further study of these resources is recommended when considering historic preservation steps for the Chautauqua Park and Ridgewood Additions.

Additionally, three properties demonstrate architectural integrity to individually qualify for nomination to the National Register of Historic Places. These properties are located at: 816 Brookridge Avenue, 1214 Ridgewood Avenue, and 1210 Orchard Drive.

Narrative Statement of Significance

Criterion A: District is Associated with Significant Events

The Chautauqua Park and Ridgewood Additions are examples of an early automobile suburbs with emphasized proximity of park land and Iowa State College. These neighborhoods illustrate a transition from the early grid plan to an Olmstedian plan with curvilinear streets that embraced the physical curves of the landscape, showing the progressive thinking in community planning in early twentieth-century Ames. The Ridgewood Addition was the first in Ames to offer public works improvements finished to each lot prior to sale. As automobiles became readily available, terrain previously considered less viable for development was now more accessible, and these areas became populated by more affluent community members who could afford automobiles. This use of rougher ground instead of clear-cutting and leveling prior to development also promoted a connection to nature, and direct connections to park space underlined this value that Fredrick Law Olmsted, Sr., popularized.

Criterion B: Property is Associated with the Lives of Significant Persons

Multiple early residents of the Chautauqua Park and Ridgewood Additions have been identified as having significance at local and even national levels. Mrs. Josephine Mundhenk Beardshear, widow of influential Iowa State College president William M. Beardshear, built her home at 714 Brookridge Avenue in the Chautauqua Park Addition in 1916. Abbie Belle Sawyer was a significant figure in early childhood education in Ames, beginning the first kindergarten in 1917, and she resided at 1102 Ridgewood Avenue in the Ridgewood Addition beginning in 1941. Dr. Frank Spedding headed up the Iowa State College team for the Manhattan Project beginning in 1942 and was head of the Institute of Atomic Research starting in 1945 – he lived at 1253 Orchard Drive in the Ridgewood Addition during this time. Dr. Guy Ernest McFarland, Sr., started the McFarland Clinic in Ames in 1924, an early example of a group practice in Iowa, and he lived at 1205 Ridgewood Avenue in the Ridgewood Addition starting in 1930. The early residents of the Chautauqua Park and Ridgewood Additions varied in professional and personal background, however there were significant themes in class, ties to Iowa State College, commerce, medicine, and city government. Collectively and individually, these people had significant impact on the City of Ames.

Criterion C: District had Distinctive Architectural Characteristics

The Chautauqua Park and Ridgewood Additions combine the aesthetics of early-to-mid-twentieth century architectural style movements; including Craftsman, Colonial Revival, Tudor Revival, and Minimal Traditional; retaining key style characteristics and designs. These styles resulted from national trends with very different roots, but they were built together in close proximity in the Additions, creating a blended effect over the decades of construction.
